

Public service – not hate and fear

Don't let the BNP break up our public services.

A message for UNISON members

UNISON represents everybody – the BNP does not.

As UNISON members, we are all committed to providing public services that change people's lives.

Only by standing together can we defend those services.

The BNP argues that Black and migrant workers – many of whom are UNISON members – are taking jobs from white people. In the real world our Black and migrant members are essential people doing essential jobs.

Public services are already under attack and anxieties about our jobs and futures are high, the BNP are seeking to exploit people's fears.

Public services depend on all of us. That's why, as UNISON members, we believe that the fight against the BNP is a fight for public services.

We are campaigning for a fairer society that values all its members equally – a society where social justice, good jobs and quality public services comes first, not racism, hate and fear.

Don't let the BNP divide us.
